“A Testing Program for Adult High School Equivalency”

Introduction

General Educational Development (GED) is an international testing program for adults who have been unable to complete high school. We recognize that adults acquire knowledge, skills, and concepts through working, training, travelling, reading, and other informal learning. GED Tests measure the level of “educational maturity” gained through experience, which is often equal to, or above, the level of a high school graduate.

GED Tests are available in Canada, the United States, and in some foreign countries.

This brochure should answer most of your questions about GED. Please read it carefully. We recommend that you discuss GED with someone familiar with the program. Personnel in this department can answer any questions you have. Information may also be obtained from the New Brunswick Community Colleges and high schools.

You may wish to contact the GED Chief Examiner directly by using the address, phone number, fax number, or e-mail address found on page 7.

1. What are the GED Tests?

The GED is a series of five tests in the core high school curriculum areas of writing, social studies, science, reading, and mathematics. The tests measure important knowledge and skills usually acquired during a regular high school program of study such as your ability to understand and apply information; evaluate, analyze, and draw conclusions; and express ideas and opinions in writing. Multiple-choice questions are used for each of the five tests. The Mathematics test also includes ten alternate format questions and the Writing test has an essay component. GED Tests contain questions that require the use of important ideas and thinking skills; few ask about isolated details, definitions or specific facts.

The tests are available in English and French. In New Brunswick, a GED test candidate may combine the language in which he or she chooses to write the tests in either one of Canada's official languages; according to his or her choice. However, you must pass all five tests in order to be awarded the diploma. The candidate may also rewrite a test in either one of the two official languages of Canada of his or her choice, as it is permitted to combine the language to write the test.

Tests used in Canada have been developed especially for Canadians. The tests are available in regular print and large print format.

2. Am I eligible to take the GED Tests?

To write the GED Tests in New Brunswick, you must meet the following three requirements:

- Have not graduated from high school;
- Be at least nineteen (19) years of age; and
- No longer enrolled in the public school system.

3. How long do the GED Tests take?

The five (5) tests can be written over two days for a total of seven (7) hours, five (5) minutes (see “Where & when are the GED Tests held?” on page 7). Test may also be scheduled to be written one at a time.

4. Why do people write the GED Tests?

Some of the many reasons people write the GED Tests are:

- To receive a high school equivalency diploma;
- To qualify for a better job;
- To gain promotion within their own organization;
- To apply for admission to educational and training institutions;
- For personal satisfaction.

7. Is a GED Diploma equivalent to high school graduation?

The GED Testing Program compares your performance on the tests to the results of high school seniors on the same tests. The tests take into consideration the skills and knowledge people are expected to retain from high school, especially the ability to reason, put together information, and draw conclusions.

If you obtain a standard score of at least 450 out of a possible 800 on each of the five GED Tests, you will receive a high school equivalency diploma. This diploma will show others that you have the potential of a high school graduate and the maturity to succeed in areas of further training and/or study. However, specific knowledge that a recent high school graduate might have acquired, (such as mathematical and chemical formulas, or the work of specific authors) is not tested. There is no credit value associated with the GED tests.

8. Who recognizes a GED Diploma?

The GED Diploma is widely accepted as meeting secondary school graduation requirements for purposes of employment and further education. However, there is no guarantee that the diploma will be accepted by employers or post-secondary institutions in every instance.

Many community colleges and universities accept satisfactory GED scores as one factor in their assessment for admission as a mature student.

The New Brunswick Community Colleges will accept a GED Diploma as equivalent to high school completion. Please consult the Community Colleges Calendars for specific admission requirements.

9. How much does it cost?

There is no fee for writing the GED. Additional copies of test results can be obtained for a fee of five dollars each. A replacement diploma can be obtained for a fee of ten dollars.

10. How do I apply to write the GED Tests?

Application forms are available on-line (see website address on page 9). Paper copies of the Application can also be obtained directly from this Department.

After you have carefully filled out the Application form please submit it online. If you are using the paper Application, please submit it to the GED Chief Examiner (see address on page 9).

Due to limited seating numbers, you are advised to apply early. Your application must be received at least two (2) weeks prior to the testing date you select.

Candidates are asked to contact the GED Chief Examiner 1 week prior to your writing date if you are unable to show up for a scheduled testing session.

Applications are kept on file for a period of one year.

11. How do I prepare for the GED Tests?

Skills you have acquired from work, training, reading, and other experiences have already helped prepare you to write the GED Tests.

For additional preparation, you may:

- Attend a GED preparation course at a Community Adult Learning Centre. Please contact the Employment and Continuous Learning Services Branch at the toll free number 1-877-444-0510 or your local Regional Adult Learning Committee.
- Study books from the library on various subject areas;
- Obtain GED preparation book(s) from friends, your local library, schools or book stores.
- For online GED preparation, please contact the Employment and Continuous Learning Services Branch at the toll free number 1-877-444-0510.

12. Where and when are the GED Tests held?

Testing sessions are held in Miramichi, Fredericton, Moncton, Saint John, and Woodstock. Sessions may be held in other locations.

GED testing sessions are usually held over a two-day period on Friday evening and Saturday in order to accommodate most working applicants.

Approximately two weeks before the testing session, you will be advised of the specific location, dates, and times of writing.

The testing sessions are scheduled regularly during the year.

Contact the GED Chief Examiner for further information.

13. What do I bring to the test session?

Upon arrival you must show a valid Photo I.D. bearing your name, date of birth, address, and signature (such as driver's license, passport, and military identification). You will not be permitted to write without proper identification.

All supplies will be provided at the testing session. No materials such as reference books, slide rules or dictionaries may be used when writing the tests.

14. Test Results

If you obtain a standard score of at least 450 on each of the five tests, you will be issued a high school equivalency diploma.

You must complete both the multiple-choice questions (Part I) and the essay component (Part II) to receive a score on the Writing test. The two parts are combined and one score reported. Two evaluators will score the essay according to its overall effectiveness. It is important to note that an essay score below two (2) is inadequate and will result in a zero on the Writing test.

Within six (6) weeks after you take the tests, your results will be communicated to you. A diploma and transcript will be mailed to the client when all 5 tests have been successfully completed.

If you require a transcript be sent to someone other than yourself, you must submit a written request along with the required five dollar fee. Please include your complete name, present mailing address and date of birth on your request.

15. Are rewrites possible?

You may rewrite any test which the standard score is less than 450.

Paper-Based and Computer-Based test delivery – In order to achieve a Passing Standard, Candidates may retest on a content area test in accordance with the following:

- a. After the Candidate's initial testing attempt may retest up to two times on the content area with no wait time between the retests.
- b. For attempts after the third testing attempt each re-test attempt must be preceded by a 60-day waiting period.

A test which has been passed may be rewritten if an employer or educational institution submits written verification that a higher score is required.
